Chapter 1 by Supercomicbookgirl

I find myself in you.

Do you also think so?

I don't know, probably not.

Am I sick for always thinking about you?

No, but others, maybe even you, might think so. I ask myself, is it even possible to fall in love so suddenly, even if you don't even know them? Questions, questions, there're enough of them on this world already, but the thing we lack are answers.

Chapter 2 by Ruby and Sassy

My friends say that people like me are 'sick', and 'different'. It's normal for me, so, what is it like to love a boy? I don't think the boys at school are cute. But you make my heart soar. What would I do without you?

Chapter 3 by Xycronic

I dream of you. Did you know that?

I feel your breath, giving me shivers as it is whisked across my neck.

Why do people scorn us? Why, when they have never experienced the feeling of love, a freedom to fly across the expanse of your face?

Boys? I only have eyes for you. If I could only tell you.

More questions blossom like my heart after meeting you. Can they ever be answered?

Chapter 4 by Lucy Semmelmeier

I feel you with me. You are always there, always watching. Are people afraid of that? Do people do bad things, things they feel shouldn't be watched?

Chapter 5 by Xycronic

I yearn to touch you. Your soft skin resting against my hands is a delicious fantasy.

Is that wrong?

Is it a bad thing to have an uncontrollable itch whenever I see you? And the scratch remains in your hands.

You have often expressed your opinion on how cute that boy is and so-and-so. Have you ever thought about me?

I think about you to the point of obsession. Is it bad or good? How could something beautiful be bad?

What does love mean? Is it love or lust that I feel when I stand beside you? They say gay, but I feel only happiness around you, not disgust.

Could you, would you believe in me as I do you? You make me float when I walk, something others cannot.

These questions I never propose. It is shameful to admit to loving you when you could not love me back. And yet I admire you.

Is that sickening to you?

To brush the back of my neck

I want you so badly, yet I cannot have you.

When you walk by, I smell your perfume. I would just love to dive right in. I want you to want me like I do you.

I want your kiss to be the only one I feel. I want to be the only one you think about.

Chapter 7 by Paige Cie

Just thinking about you puts smiles on my face. Just seeing that goofy smile you have makes me burst in my heart.

Just touching your skin makes mine grow hot.

Can you feel it. Do you feel the same.

Do you feel the longing to hold me in your arm as I for you? Do you have the need to see me everyday?

Is your heart taking over your brain to whisper my name?

Is it wrong for you to know this?

Is it wrong that every minute of the day my heart is hollow with out you being there?

Is it wrong for me to not be able to see anyone but you when there are millions of others?
